KILLER LOOKS

By MICHAEL ROVIN

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Following a manhunt that covered three counties last December, 26-year-old Ann Gelic was apprehended and immediately quarantined — from men.

'Three men had died by the time we had identified her'

"She's a menace," said police Capt. Albert Buck, who made the arrest while the woman was innocently doing her Christmas shopping. "It's not her fault, but until we figure out how to fix that we have to keep Ms. Gelic in isolation."

The problem, according to Buck, is that the woman literally has killer looks.

"Three men had died by the time we had identified and apprehended her," Buck explained. "One of them spotted her on the street and walked into traffic. Another happened to glance at her while driving and crashed into a lamppost. A window washer saw her in her office and fell from a platform four stories up."

Police were put on Gelic's trail by a helpful butcher.

"She is just so lovely, so winsome," Jason Freeb said. "When she walked into my shop for a gift box of meats, I was so distracted I cut off one of my fingers."

We asked police psychologist Julie Wince why Gelic is only now causing this kind of reaction.

"Until recently, Ms. Gelic had been in a long-term relationship," Wince said. "She was 'closed down' to other men during the three years she had a boyfriend, and was depressed when it ended. As soon as her unhappiness lifted — just a care of herself again and began to radiate renewed life and beauty. She became a true femme fatale."

After discussing the situation with Gelic — who protectively wore a Santa beard left over from Christmas — the police convinced her that she would have to change her appearance.

"Whether that means wearing a mask, gaining weight, or putting a paper bag over her head, she has to make herself less beautiful," Buck said.

Although Gelic was upset, she offered a compromise, which the police department accepted.

"She's not going to pig-out or hide her face," said Gelic's attorney Bette Smith. "However, she agreed to wear a black veil until she finds another boyfriend. That may cause a few black eyes or concussions, but what can you do? The

MUSICAL CONDUCTOR

CLEVELAND – During the Ohio Classic Orchestra's performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, maestro Herman Goldberg experienced quite a shock – literally.

"At the end of the piece, bolts of electricity shot up from the floor," said Cynthia Young, the first violist. "They struck our conductor who fell from the stage."

"Maestro Goldberg is an electrifying stage presence," said first chair Glenn Richerow. "But this is the first time he's ever been electrified."

Aside from his charred clothes Maestro Goldberg was dazed but unharmed. At the hospital Dr. Richard Cressman tried to figure out why the conductor was electrocuted.

"I found a few cases in the medical database where a conductor had been the victim of electrocution," said Dr. Cressman. "There was nothing common about the locales or onstage wiring, so it had to be something else."

After interviewing several musicians and audience members in the forward parquet section, Dr. Cressman found one common element.

"Everyone said that Maestro Goldberg's arms were fully outstretched when he was zapped," said Dr. Cressman. "It's possible that in the same way a telephone converts sound into electricity, conductors occasionally convert the powerful sound of the orchestra and chorus into a single powerful discharge."

The concert hall management immediately ordered rubber-insulated podia for its conductors and is shortening the length of batons so they don't act like lightning rods.

"We're also treating the scores with a nonflammable coating," said director

NYPD CRACKS DOWN ON

BROOKLYN, N.Y. — The days of stray cats having control of city streets are about to come to an end.

"This used to be a clean town at night, till cats started to overpopulate," said Brooklyn activist Henry Miller. "At first, their nocturnal predation kept the rat and pigeon population down. But now the dynamic has changed.

"The cats are moving in packs, like shrimpy lions and are more arrogant than usual."

'THE LIGHT AT THE END OF THE TUNNEL' WOULD GO OUT DURING DUBYA'S TERM IN OFFICE!

DEAR EDITOR, So there's no more 'light at the end of the tunnel,' huh? Go figure that it would go out during the Bush administration. I had no suppose it makes perfect sense.

Just how ironic is it though that this president has the lowest approval ratings ever and he's the what do we have to look forward to? It's like there's no end in sight now!

I also understand no one can light it back up again. Well maybe we need a new president to spark it up. If it was shining before George W., then maybe it will shine after. Or maybe we could get a former president to go over there . . . Do you think Clinton is available to offer up his 'special touch?'

Dear Editor, I think inventor Davon Burger's idea of building a giant air-conditioner to cool the earth (Aug. 29, 2005) is a good idea, but isn't it obvious that his timing is all wrong?

News flash: It's winter!

Why would we need air-conditioning now? What we really need is a giant heater, just think warming up your car for 30 minutes before you leave the house. No more bundling up in 17 layers of clothes. Winter would be so much more bearable!

by cats, according to eyewitnesses. Police Captain Michael Bergman has put together a task force to deal specifically with this problem.

"The Quality of Life laws aren't just for people. They apply to animals as well," said Capt. Bergman. "There is too much cat litter in this town. If they don't start picking up their garbage, we're going to pick them up."

The task force has already started setting up checkpoints every 10 blocks and is equipped to deal with the problem.

"If a cat so much as coughs up a hairball and leaves it, we'll know," the captain insisted. "Our men will dangle balls of string from the rooftops. When the cat goes to play with it, we'll pounce."

The men also have tiny handcuffs designed for cat paws. Once caught they're put in small sacks and whisked to a rehabilitation center.

"Before we let the cats out of the bag, we train them in the art of civilized behavior," said Bergman. "For those who can't be trained, there's the river. As in 'up the river,' not in it."

So far the police have had great success with their feline hunt.

"I'm used to seeing our boys bring in human beings in cuffs," said Sgt. Robert Bowen. "Now, when a cop brings in a perp, we look to see what cat he's dragged in."

Dear Editor, It's about time someone finally figured out a positive use for the static shock you make when you slide slippered feet on carpet (Dec. 26, 2005). I love the idea of heating your home with Slipper Power!

From Roosevelt's lovable Teddy Bear

STUFFED ICONS OF HISTORY'S MOST

By LEONARD McCOY

WASHINGTON, D.C. — One of the most popular toys in American history was inspired by a President who, while on a hunting trip, refused to shoot a bear cub.

"In 1902, the Teddy Bear was named in honor of Theodore Roosevelt's environmentally sensitive act," said historian George Tiddly, who has traveled the world in search of rare toys. "However, Teddy was not the first or only world leader to have a toy made in his image.

"The first potentate known to have a toy animal named after him was the Ramses Camel of Ancient Egypt," said Tiddly. "Because the name is now associated with birth control and smoking, it is little mentioned these days."

"Next came the Kamehameha Goose of Hawaii in 1810," said Tiddly. "The rather overweight king was flattered to be depicted as a slender goose — until he found out it was female. The item was discontinued.

"Prime Minister Lloyd George of Great Britain wanted to one-up Roosevelt by creating a toy that depicted English tenacity," said Tiddly. "In 1918 he ordered the manufacture of a toy bulldog.

However, children did not warm up to the rather ugly Georgie Bulldog and it was quickly withdrawn. There was talk of reviving it during Churchill's tenure because of his famous 'bulldog' spirit, but the English were too busy fighting a war and never got around to it."

Tiddly discovered that the French also designed their own stuffed animal following World War I.

"Premier Raymond Poincaré was very popular with his people," said Tiddly. "Toy maker Rubé Oroberg created a stuffed animal that captured not only the leader's quiet manner, but the French fondness for peace. Though the Raymond Rabbit was embraced at first, it became an unfortunate mascot during the next war.

"At the same time the French and English were looking for animal leaders, the Russians were busy trying to recapture their own legacy," Tiddly went on. "The bear had been a strong Russian symbol for centuries. Rather than surrender it to the United States, Lenin ordered factories to produce Lenny Bears, which were five times larger than Teddy Bears."

Unfortunately, few people could afford the bears or had enough room to keep them.

"Across the border, Mao Tse-tung had a stuffed dragon created in his likeness to keep people's fighting spirit up during the chaos of the Cultural Revolution," said Tiddly. "However, many considered Mao to be so vicious as a person that the dragon actually weakened their resolve. Mao himself had them discontinued and distributed his Little Red Book of sayings instead."

Perhaps the least successful national animal came from Spain.

"It was made in 1925," said Tiddly. "General Primo de Rivera didn't realize the Primo Spanish Fly was a salute to his virility. It lasted only a few weeks and was the only stuffed animal to result in a flurry of executions."

Meanwhile, Tiddly is checking into rumors that the Democratic symbol — the donkey — is being reconfigured for the 2008 presidential election as a stuffed toy called Hillary's Ass.

– & DEMANDS ITS RETURN!

"We don't care what you think," Andre Louis, the French Minister of Overseas Development, stated the obvious. "In our country it was known as the Louisiana Rental. President Jefferson leased that land for a period of 200 years in exchange for 60 million francs and the waving of French debts to American citizens. We gave the U.S. an extra three years because your current [illegible] Purchase was. He's had enough time. We want the land back."

Louis visited the White House last week and provided President Bush with documents showing proof of rental.

"We've searched our own archives and only found purchase papers," said Stalwart. "If Jefferson merely rented that land, we have no evidence of that [illegible] never forge anything like that – so we're just going to have to look into this further."

The French said we could keep the Gulf Coast, provided we don't let any other refugees into their part.

"If that isn't bad enough, the French are also insisting we give them back something else," Stalwart said. "They're [illegible]

ELDERLY MAN DIES OF RARE AGING DISEASE!

AMBLER, Pa. – An 92-year-old former stone quarry worker died last week from what experts believe is premature fossilization.

Hector Ramos was found by his son, who became worried after not hearing from him for four days. "I talk to dad every day," he said. "So I knew something was wrong."

The elderly man was found lying in bed, petrified like a 10,000-year-old skeleton. Since fossils are formed when organic matter is replaced with minerals, an autopsy was medically impossible because of the man's advanced solidness.

"It was always our family's inside joke that he was as old as a fossil, so knowing that's what he died of almost makes it easier for us to deal with," the son said. "I gave it to dad

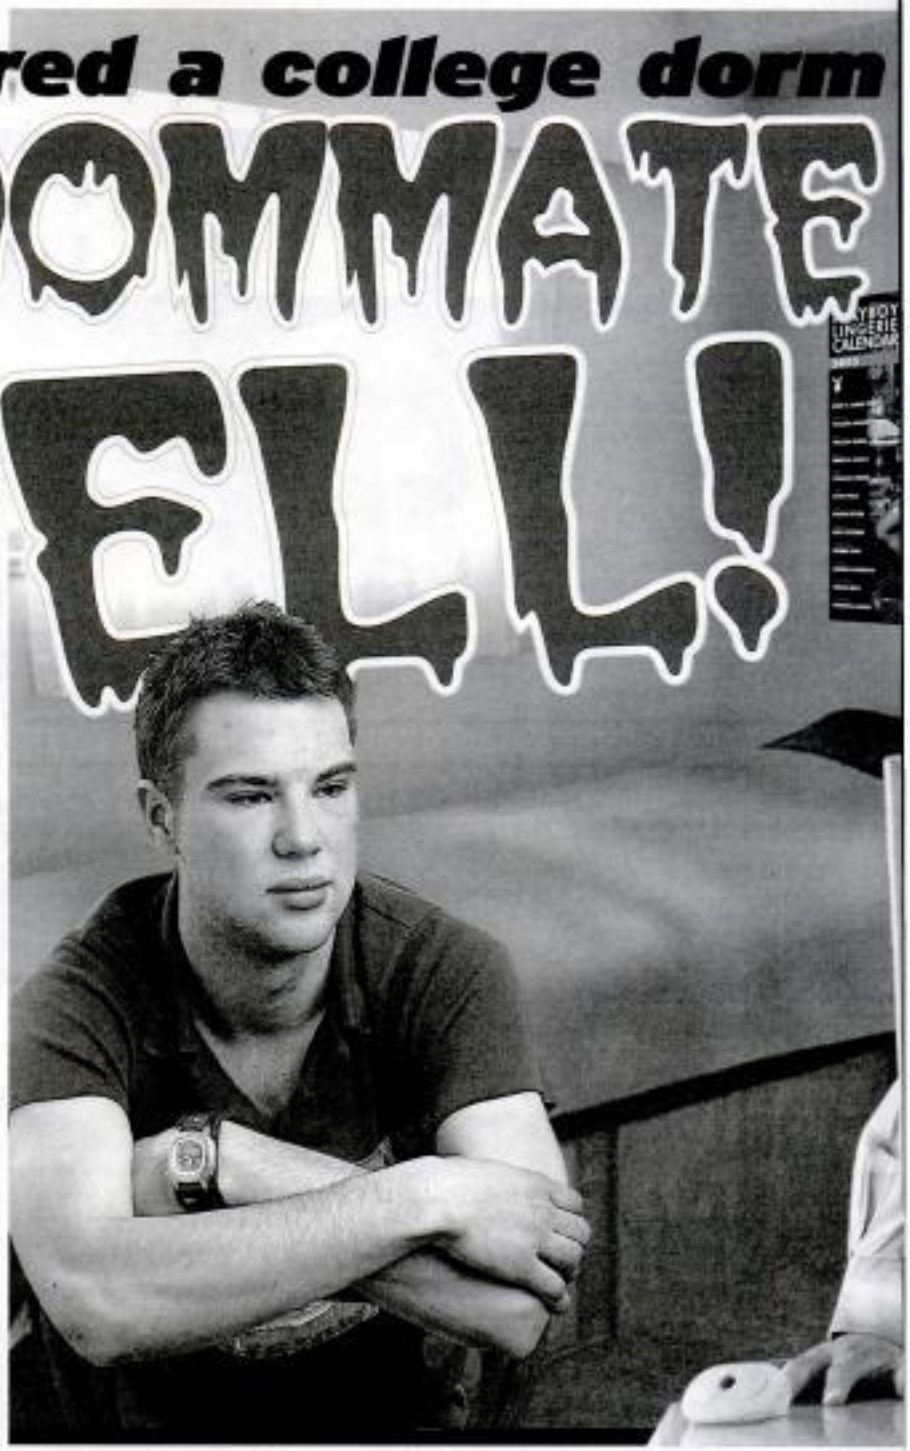
I shared a college dorm ROOMMATE HELL!



By PENN T. GRAHAM

MODESTY, Mass. — Virgil Dante, a sophomore at the prestigious Ovid Business School, returned to his dorm after summer recess to discover he had a new roommate.

"That wasn't so unusual, though I was disturbed to learn my old roomie had perished in a strange, red mist while returning to campus," Dante told Weekly World News.

"As I walked in, my new roommate Johnny Brimstone introduced himself. He was a well-tanned young man with slick black hair and slender, angular looks. He said he had just transferred from Tartarus Junior College and was anxious to start courses in advanced accounting and logistics.

"Brimstone told me his dad was a real taskmaster and that if he didn't make the Dean's List, 'There would be hell to pay.' I laughed and told him my folks were pretty strict, too."

Mercury-poisoned fish benefit the environment:

'NATURE'S THERMOMETERS' HELP FIGHT GLOBAL WARMING

By MACK BECQUEREL

CLOUDED HILLS, N.J. – The environmental crusaders of EarthFury International set sail last week, speeding toward an illegal mercury-dumping operation off the New Jersey coast. But – to the polluters' surprise – EarthFury's activists hadn't come to stop the poisoning of these waters.

"We sent a team to help push about 400 tons of mercury-contaminated waste into the sea," said Paul Hunter, skipper of the organization's ship Peace Avenger. "We've discovered that mercury-poisoned fish – which cause brain damage and birth defects if eaten by humans – can be read like thermometers. They are helping to provide great insight into global warming trends."

According to EarthFury, mercury accumulates in the brains of predatory fish such as tuna. Heat from the seawater causes the mercury to expand just as the mercury in a thermometer rises from the glass bulb into a calibrated tube. Scientists aboard the Peace Avenger catch the fish, see how far the water temperature has pushed the mercury along the fishes' vertebral columns, then use the ribs as an index to record the temperature of the water from which the specimen was pulled.

"If I have one regret about my work," Hunter said, "it's that I have to visit so many places defiled by human industry.

"Look around you," he went on, indicating New Jersey's industrial landscape. "This is the butthole of the Earth. But then, I suppose it's a fitting place to

DON'T GET CARRIED AWAY

By MICHAEL ROVIN

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Due to the growing number of citizens now attending protests – from peace marches to anti-death-penalty rallies – metropolitan police have been forced to devise more effective methods of crowd control.

"While most protesters obey the laws, we do end up arresting a good number of people for unruly or reckless behavior," said Captain Philip Law. "Bopping them with batons or firing tear gas is unwieldy. We needed something new."

That's where 'toe trucks' come in.

"We now have the ability to convert regular tow trucks into vehicles that haul people away," said Captain Law. "The back of the trucks can be quickly outfitted with a harness that has two dozen fine nylon lines. At the ends are adjustable cuffs, which are slipped around the toes of the troublemakers.

COMPUTER NETWORK SENDS MESSAGES THROUGH THE GRAPEVINE LITERALLY

By VINCENT CANARD

ST. HELENA, Calif. — In these valleys renowned for brilliant wines and advanced electronics, computer scientists from Pacific Occidental University have successfully transmitted digital information across the vines of the Claris Estate winery.

"We're calling it the VintnerNet," said Grapevine Project chief Lee Nurden.

Lee and his fellow innovators first conceived their grapevine network last year, as a natural next step for digital correspondence.

"The Internet is the first communications system able to operate through any kind of conduit—old copper telephone wires, fiber optics, coaxial lines," Lee said. "Here in wine country, we saw that we were surrounded by miles of natural cable. We were determined to find a way to get it all on-line."

Lee's solution was 'cavitation.' Usually, water and nutrients crawl along a grapevine at a rate of three feet an hour. Sometimes, however, small bubbles form around nutrient particles.

Ordinarily, the bubbles cause damage to the vines when they burst. Lee's engineers discovered that artificially-induced and carefully controlled cavitation could create a string of harmlessly small bubbles that zip along the vine at speeds approaching the high bit-rates of electrical Internet connections.

"We attach a computer to one end of the grapevine," Lee explained. "The computer sends an electrical impulse to the chamber, which lowers the pressure inside the vine's transport tissues. Bubbles form, new ones pushing the old ones along. Their fragile shells vibrate in binary code.

"The last bubble bursts when it reaches the receiving computer at the other end of the grapevine. There, the electrically charged bubble emits a flash of light specific to its vibration."

A photovoltaic cell in the computer decodes the swift, bubbling grapevine light-bits as it would any data stream.

"The system has a lot of advantages," Lee said. "First of all, it's beautiful. I'll take arbors and trellises and climbing vines over ugly telephone poles any day.

"The grapevine's also unhackable," Lee explained. "Grapevine transmissions carry with them the unmistakable grape flavor unique to every vineyard. And there's no faking those."

Lee also noted that the vines are unhackable in a literal sense as well.

"Even if somebody managed to cut through the whole tangle of them with a machete, they'd grow back faster than your ordinary Internet provider could fix a service interruption," he said.

"So we have complete protection of all the system's ports — and its claret, syrahs and caber-

Outraged Civil liberties activists have begun protesting the use of the device, but most of them end up getting hauled away.

"Watching us drag a dozen bleeding hearts down the street sends a powerful message to everyone else," said Captain Law. "It tells them to just go about their business and stop interfering with the process of government."

Encouraged by the effectiveness of toe trucks, the police are preparing to inaugurate a new and even more effective method of crowd-control.

TALKERS

By DICK SIEGEL

COLUMBIA, S.D. — Jon Cloud, the meteorologist for TV station KNAV, was having difficulty accurately predicting the weather.

"Like most TV weathermen, my degree of accuracy was about 65 percent," Cloud told Weekly World News. "Even with modern technology — radar, Doppler, barometric pressure, satellite tracking — I still couldn't tell my viewers with certainty whether they'd get rain or sun. Ratings were slipping and my boss wanted results. So I took the weekend off to visit my family.

"I knew that my grandfather, Chief Thundercloud, was a windtalker — one of the celebrated heroes of World War II who communicated coded messages in the unbreakable Navajo tongue. However, I discovered he was more than that.

"I am also a 'wind talker,' " Thundercloud said. "I speak to the Sky God. You must learn to do the same."

"He told me that the Four Winds meet atop Mount Airy to sing and dance. He said I had to ask for their help in predicting the weather. I thought my granddad had a few bees in his war bonnet, but what did I have to lose?

"As I got to the top of the mountain the winds were blowing something fierce," Cloud said. "I felt a little crazy asking for their help, but suddenly the winds swirled about me like dust devils whispering in my ear.

" 'Sing!' they said," Cloud recalled wistfully.

JON CLOUD learned to respect his elders and how to be a better weatherman.

"I began to chant the traditional Navajo air Tears of the Mournful Sun," he said. "The Sky God seemed pleased with my selection. The Four Winds embraced me and lifted me several feet from the ground. They had accepted me as a 'wind talker.'

"They asked, still whispering, what they could do for me. I explained about my job and the problems I was having. The Four Winds assured me they would help.

"Since then, each morning, their little sister Gale blows in and lets me know what the weather will be," he said. "Since then my forecasts have been 100 percent accurate and ratings have soared.

"Not only that, but my grandfather showed me a dance that has come in handy on several occasions," he added. "I am now the only meteorologist in the world who can make it rain if the area needs it!"

'SMOKING GUN' BURNS VICTIMS

By JAKE ANDERSON

HOUSTON, Texas – For years, health advocates have claimed that the two biggest threats to American health are guns and cigarettes. Now they've discovered the "smoking gun" that gives their claim an entirely new meaning.

"We've encountered the deadliest threat known to civilization – if we discount the current administration," said Marvin Lehigh, founder of Stop Cigarettes and Guns (SCAG). "It's a gun that shoots cigarettes and is to death. Being hit by a butt traveling at high velocities can really get under your skin.

"Second, if it hits you in the mouth it can push enough concentrated smoke into your lungs to give you cancer on the spot.

"Third, if you try to stop it with your hands – a natural reflex – you will suffer serious burns, becoming a victim of 'second hand' smoke."

But Roger Gripps, the Smoke Pistol's inventor, into one package. No one's forcing anyone to pack 'heat', as it were."

Then there was the man who destroyed his health by drinking to other people's.

A carpet layer had just finished installing carpet for a lady. He stepped out for a smoke but realized room, under the carpet, was a bump.

"It's not worth pulling up the entire floor for one pack of smokes," he said to himself. He got his hammer and proceeded to flatten the hump.

As he was cleaning up the lady came over.

"Here," she said, handling him his pack of cigarettes. "I found them in the hall. Now if only I could find my parakeet."

A man returned from Africa feeling very sick. He visited his doctor, who immediately rushed the guy to the hospital. The man woke up to the ringing of a phone in an empty room at the hospital. He picked it up.

"Hello?"

"We've received the results from your tests," said the doctor on the other end. "Bad news – you have Ebola."

"Oh, dear God," cried the man. "What am I going to do?"

"Don't panic," the doctor told him. "First, we're going to put you on a diet of pizza, pancakes and pita bread."

"Will that cure me?"

"No, but it's the only food we'll be able to slip under the door."

The Sunday school teacher asked, "How many of you want to go to Heaven?"

Every hand went up except Jerry's. Surprised, the teacher asked, "Don't you want to go to heaven?" Jerry said, "Not if these kids are going!"

A boy came home from school and told his mother he'd gotten a part in the school play.

"Wonderful!" the mother said. "What part is it?"

"I play the part of the husband," he replied. The mother frowned.

"Go back and tell the teacher you want a speaking role," she said.

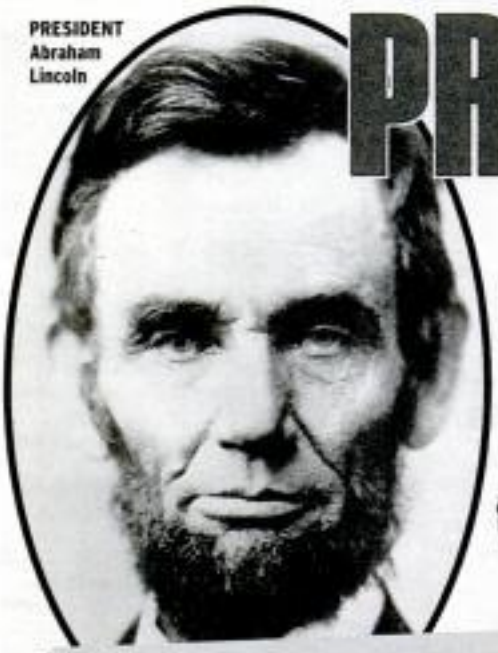
PRESIDENTS' DAZE



PRESIDENT Abraham Lincoln

PRESIDENT George Washington

. . . an excuse to separate hard working Americans from their hard-earned money & turn all historical holidays into . . .

3-DAY SALES EVENTS!

ONCE AGAIN, President's Day is nearly upon us — the combined weight of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln's birthdays coupled as one is super. Two of the most important American presidents bound in one big celebration.

But of what? A three-day spectacular weekend extravaganza of sales and consumer frenzy, that's what.

People, there's something amiss and it has nothing to do with Honest Abe or the Father of Our Country (perhaps the first and last president who could not day weekend or to encourage consumer spending. These two dates in particular were actually for remembering and honoring the births of those great men. Other holidays were created as a way to salute those who had died keeping the torch of liberty lit, exploring the seas, or fighting for civil rights. Not for spurring Dollar Days Events at the local bargain store.

Sadly, the mass marketing of holidays has gone far beyond merely combining days or changing the name. It's created amnesia. For instance, Veterans Day used to be known as Armistice Day, the date WW1 ended. November 11 should be remem-to teach the young about that conflict.

Veterans Day (which engulfed Armistice Day in 1954) should be a separate day. And Memorial Day should be the time to remember all of those who sacrificed so much. By changing the names or relocating the dates for convenience, we obscure the reason a holiday was established, a day of hallowed reflection about the first world conflict. Where do you think the word holiday comes from, anyway? Hallowed Day.

December 7. November 22. September 11. These are dates we recall with clarity because they remain linked to the attack on Pearl Harbor, the killing of President Kennedy and the assaults on Making the situation even worse is the proliferation of so-called Hallmark holidays like Valentines Day, Mother's Day, Secretary's Day and the like. It is becoming more and more difficult to differentiate between the sacred (say, Christmas) and the frivolous (Halloween) — especially when there is so much commercialization attached to them (cards, parades, 'sales events').

We need to clear the calendar of the clutter and allow the truly historic days, events and people to remain special to us. We can start by unlinking those great men who are joined in the only way that has any significance at all: As presidents who devoted their lives to the creation and preservation of this singularly great nation.

Security guard falls victim to occupational hazard when he becomes . . .

BORED STIFF!

SECURITY GUARD Vince Fuller

By MICHAEL ROVIN

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — "Nothing exciting ever happens at work," said Cheshire Clothes security guard Vince Fuller. "People here are really civilized. No shoplifters, no fights, nothing. It's so boring!"

After four months of stultifying inactivity, Fuller made a terrible discovery.

"I couldn't move my body," said the 54-year-old Fuller.

The guard simply fell over like a stack of clothes. He lay behind the security desk until one of the clerks noticed him and called 911.

Dr. Terence Stimp was the emergency room physician who cared for Fuller.

"I've seen this before," said Stimp. "Fuller's cerebellum became numb due to prolonged inactivity. That affected the autonomic nervous system, which shut down the motor functions of the body — like a computer going into hibernation mode.

"In essence, Mr. Fuller was 'bored stiff.'"

BECOMING bored stiff is brought on by inactivity, i.e.: The brain becomes numb and the autonomic nervous system shuts down the body's motor functions.

"It was pretty much eradicated by the computer age. But anyone can have a psychosomatic response to ennui."

Mr. Fuller underwent excite-games. After two months he was able to return to work. However, the manager of Cheshire Clothes decided not to take any chances.

"He has me folding clothes when there aren't many shoppers in the store, just to keep me busy," grumbled Fuller. "Unfortu-

THE FAMED CHARLIE HORSE DIES!

By MARK MILLER

LEXINGTON, Ky. – A muscle cramp is often referred to as a "charley horse." What most people don't realize, however, is that the painful condition is named for a real thoroughbred.

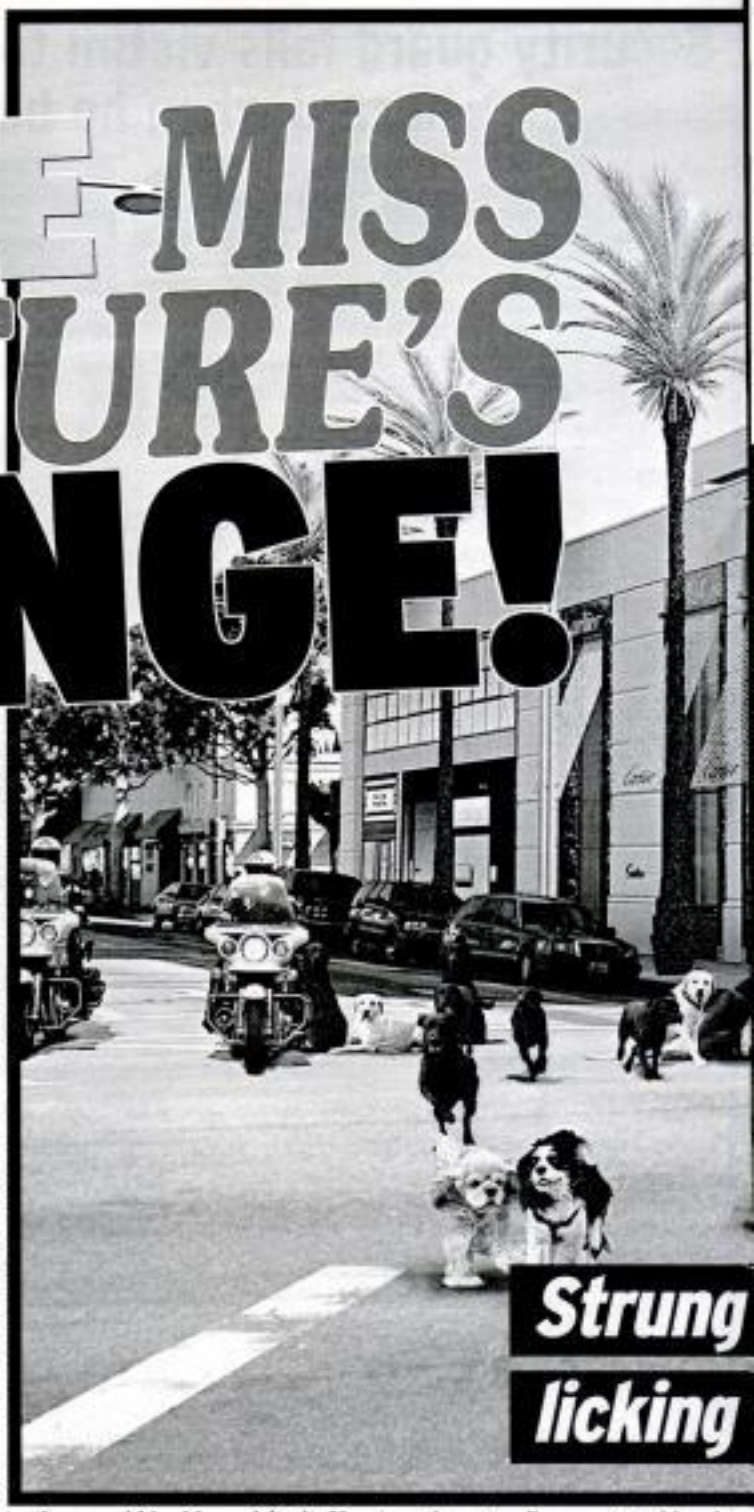
"Charlie Horse was a 1929 Kentucky Derby contender," said his jockey, 99-year-old Steven Lowe. "We were coming down the Derby's home stretch when Charlie Horse was stricken with one of his periodic leg cramps. I could see he was in pain but I whispered to him, 'Please, Charlie Horse, we need to win this one.' Charlie Horse nodded and proceeded to give that lap everything he had. We lost by a nose and Charlie Horse collapsed and died shortly after crossing the finish line, so I guess it was kind of a waste. The muscle spasm was named in his honor."

Lowe retired from racing and went on international speaking tours, motivating audiences with anecdotes about Charlie Horse and working through the pain.

"The most rewarding moment came in 1955, when an elderly gentleman came up to me after a presentation," Lowe said. "He said he was an inventor and thanked me for pointing out that having one's name on something

THE GAYEST AMERICAN HERO!

INVISIBLE MISS ADVENTURE'S REVENGE!



By DREW SULLIVAN

LOS ANGELES — When Kevin Andrews returned to the United States after weeks of dangerous spy work for Her Majesty's Secret Service, he was looking forward to seeing his loved ones — and they looked forward to seeing him. Ironically, due to the screwball antics of a crackpot inventor, they were doomed to disappointment. Andrews was unseeable. He had become The Invisible Miss Adventure!

Andrews — far-famed as the Gayest American Hero — had been commissioned by fashion legend Coco La Marsh and others to put an end to Professor Claude Rainesley Zitski's experiments in invisibility. They'd rightfully concluded that translucent people had no need to keep their bodies fit and trim — nor, in fact, would they have any use for clothes.

"Invisibility would have put an end to the fashion industry and its ancillary fields," said Andrews. "It wouldn't have done the adult film business any good either, I might add."

Instead of stopping the nutty professor, however, Andrews had accidentally gotten a dose of Vano-Cream, Zitski's invisibility lotion. Miss Adventure also geance on a society that mocked him." Andrews remarked. "He sent me out to cause havoc — and since his lotion had already begun to make me think queerly, I figured there was no reason to argue the point. Actually, even though I'd taken off all my clothes, I couldn't see any point!"

Miss Adventure fled Zitski's lavatory at Nickles' Notions and Novelties — where the professor had rented a rest room — and embarked on a reign of terror.

"Naked and on the road to insanity — which is the only way to describe Beverly Hills at Christmas — I began by ringing people's doorbells, which was sort of cool since, being transparent, I didn't bother to run. That was fun till one day when I was standing at a door and someone came up behind me and tried to insert his key. Honey, that hurt — but it wasn't nearly as bad as when I spun around in surprise and he tried to turn the doorknob!

"Next, I decided to raise hell by knocking hats off the heads of men and women. For some reason it didn't terrorize anyone the way I'd hoped. They just thought it was the wind. I guess I shouldn't have been surprised, since I had done a great deal of blowing as I raced down the street.

"Zitski was pretty annoyed, but he gave me one last chance to panic the populace. I hit on some-other would be blamed for it. Unfortunately, my little prank sparked more romance than quarrels. This was not the revenge the mad scientist had been seeking. I had to turn up the heat."

Miss Adventure's sanity was dwindling faster than the audience for the sorry revival of The Night Stalker. Determined to make bad, worker standing next to him, he inadvertently slugged Miss Adventure instead — and Miss Adventure fell into a frosting vat!

"I was covered! Exposed!" Andrews wailed. "I'd been warned that being dunked in water would make me visible but nobody said a thing about chocolate frosting!

"There I was, completely nuts stricken, I fled the bakery and ran down Rodeo Drive — and before I knew it I had every dog in the neighborhood on my tail. Or what they thought was my tail!"

Soon the canines were joined by some ravenous shoppers and a half-dozen diabetics. The mob ran Andrews to ground in front of the local police precinct and proceed-

"I can put up a good fight when I have to," Andrews explained, "but I know when I'm licked."

Taken into custody, Andrews confessed his crimes. When the authorities stopped laughing, they arrested Professor Zitski and forced him to administer an antidote. Once again Andrews was the visible ("Highly visible!") Miss

"Not only were all charges dropped by the bakery, but I inspired a new cream-filled pastry. What's more, the professor got his own office at Nickles' Notions and Novelties when it was discovered that Vano-Cream worked on rubber. He's found fame and fortune as the

"Still, Professor Zitski dreams of a day when society fully accepts invisibility," Andrews told us. "For now, he remains the only one who can 'see' invisibility as a lifestyle."

SKELETON CREW

They work their fingers to the bone

PORTLAND, Maine — Two years ago, factory owner Frank Wetter built his herb factory on what he was told was a vacant lot.

By MICHAEL ROVIN

"My herbal products business was really taking off," he said. "Everything went well until last summer when gas prices started to rise. Getting raw materials to the factory became terribly expensive. I had to lay people off and do some of the jobs myself."

One night, as Wetter was locking the front door, it began to pour. As he ran to his car he tripped over something sticking up from the soft earth.

"It was a skeleton bone," he said. "A kneecap. I was kind of freaked out, though not nearly as much as when it suddenly started to move!"

More than a dozen skeletons emerged from the ground of what — Wetter later learned — was an unmarked colonial-era cemetery. Wetter realized that the rich herbal residue from the factory had somehow restored rudimentary life to the bones.

After getting a grip, Wetter asked the skeletons what they wanted.

"Instead of attacking me and eating my brains or something, they asked for jobs. Obviously, the 'Puritan' work ethic was sort of alive and well."

Wetter put them straight to work — on the graveyard shift, of course.

"Since my skeleton crew started productivity has doubled," said Wetter. "They work their fingers to the marrow.

"And they don't need money," he added. "They just asked for a warm, dry place to 'park their bones,' as they put it."

THAT REALLY HAIRY SOMETHING-OR-OTHER

By WILLIAM STEWART

CLEVELAND, Ohio – An etymologist – someone who studies the origin of words – is an unusual enough occupation. However, Professor Peter Grey has narrowed the field even further.

"I'm a supernaturaletymologist," laughed the 55-year-old scholar. "I study the origin of names given to bizarre places and creatures. I became interested in this field 30 years ago when I was going through the diary of Sir Edmond Spelunker and discovered that before it was described as 'Abominable,' the infamous Himalayan 'Snowman' was known as the Butt Hairy Something-or-Other. Anthropologists finally decided those were undignified and settled on the current name.

CREATURE FROM THE BLACK LOCHOON

"That same process has been applied to phenomena throughout history and around the globe."

Grey shared a few other discarded names with Weekly World News:

Bermuda Triangle: Bermuda Drain, Bermuda Death Trap, Bermuda Square ("That was before cartographers had mapped its real shape," Grey said).

Loch Ness Monster: Loch Ness Lizard, Loch Ness Snake, That Reptilian Bastard.

Bigfoot: Bear Thing, Ape Guy, Stinky Toes.

Jack the Ripper: Harvey the Snipper, Edgar the Piercer, Herbert the Dicer ("Not knowing the killer's real name caused the press to run several up the flagpole before the police settled on 'Jack' ").

Stonehenge: Rock Pile, Stone House, Obelisk Central, The Druid Club House.

Blarney Stone: Baloney Stone, Malarky Stone, Rubbish Stone.

Area 51: Area 1, Area 2, Area 3.

"Fortunately history weeds out the cheesy names," said Grey.

Poodle Boy (Oct. 31, 2005) was grounded for two weeks after giving his parents the fright of their life this past weekend.

"One of his friends at school thought it would be funny to teach him how to play dead," his mother told Weekly World News.

"He loves to show us his new tricks and usually it makes us proud to watch him doing them, so everything would have been fine if he had just let us know he was doing one.

"But he didn't," she said.

"I went into his room to wake him up in the morning and he didn't move. I really thought he was dead!"

Poodle Boy quit the trick before she called 911, but his mother still felt what he'd done was sufficiently wrong to punish him.

Frosty gained a reputation around the town as being a 'badass' just one day after he was built. Until now, residents have been more than thrilled to have

NEIGHBORHOOD KIDS HAVE POTTY MOUTHS

HI, DOLLY: We live in a neighborhood with a lot of young children. When they play together they swear like sailors. Once, I asked a little boy playing with my child to stop cursing. He went and got his mother who bawled me out for "interfering." What is up with these parents and their my-child-is-always-right thinking? — Zelda in Fitzberg

Dear Zelda: Too many parents these days have read too many books on parenting. They're afraid to hurt their itty bitty feelings by actually disciplining them. You were right to tell Lippy Larry to clam up in a public place. You may not win a popularity contest with some of the other ladies, but at least you're right in my book.

My husband has a secret, second family!

Hi, Dolly: I've been married 12 years, and we have four children. My husband confessed to me this weekend that he also has another family he sees when his sales job takes him in their vicinity. Dolly, I feel betrayed but I can't divorce him. Even if I got a full-time job, it wouldn't begin to cover our expenses. — Betrayed in Dallas

Dear Betrayed: Honey, I ache for you and for your husband's other family. What he did is illegal. It's called polygamy. You don't have to get a job. You have to get a lawyer.

Dear Stephanie: Obviously! Your companion has a problem, either physical or mental. He may be asexual and have no need for sex. Or he may be a gay man who decided to stay celibate to please [illegible] stand, staying with Joe isn't an option.

My children are all dying to get drunk

Hi, Dolly: I have four children, ages 15-20. I overheard them talking about a 'rite of passage' which consists of drinking 21 shots of liquor. I don't think this is safe. Am I being overprotective? — Worried Mom in Missoula

Dear Worried Mom: Sugar, the 'rite of passage' your young'uns are talking about could be the passage right outta this life! Binge drinking is dangerous and only idiots do it. Rapid intake of alcohol, particularly in large amounts, can cause a coma and even death. Talk to them. Ground them. Bribe them. Do whatever you have to do to stop them.

Cousin is jealous of me and her ex-boyfriend

Hi, Dolly: My cousin Sally and I both dated the same man, John. She knew him first, and when they broke up he asked me out. John and I recently celebrated our 20th wedding anniversary. The problem is Sally is so jealous my relationship succeeded (she's just gone through her second divorce) that all she does is talk about the time she spent with him in front of everybody. I can't stop seeing her because we attend the same family functions but it's driving me nuts! — Upset in Coronado

Dear Upset: You have every right to be upset! The best thing to day her prince will come — but not when she's busy spittin' acid. No man wants that. (It might help if you ask John what turned him off to your cuz. Chances are, whatever it was — she's still doin' it!)

Ex's funeral might be uncomfortable

Hi, Dolly: What is the etiquette for a former spouse attending her ex's funeral? Bob and I split 20 years ago on amicable terms. He remarried shortly after. His wife hates me for no specific reason and won't speak to me. She told one of my children to tell me not to show up at Bob's funeral. I say too bad, he is still the father of our two children. Can I be turned away at the door of the church? — Not Wanted in Alaska

Dear Not Wanted: Yes, it is possible to turn away unwanted funeral-goers at the door. The man or woman in charge of the funeral is trained to do so — nicely but firmly. You have to decide if attending Bob's funeral is worth the ugly scene that may take place. If you don't go, make sure your children understand way. And don't forget: God hears your prayers from wherever you are.

My friend kills himself and I get blamed!

Is my artist husband crazy or just quirky?

Hi, Dolly: I am married to an artist whose bizarre behavior is considered 'amusing and quirky' by other folks, but I'm not laughing. Here's one example: When we have to go somewhere, Antonio won't leave the house until he makes sure the stove is off, the mailbox is empty, the cat's water is clean and the air pressure in the tires is correct. Sometimes he'll repeat the routine three or four times until we can finally drive away. He says he's just cau-

Dear Dawn: No and no. I'm no shrink, Sugar, but you described a classic case of Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD). I know Antonio's stressin' your last nerve, but the poor boy can't help himself! OCD sufferers must observe strict guidelines or they fear their lives will fall apart. Urge your spouse to visit a mental health professional. The disorder is treatable with a combination of therapy and prescription medication.

Be careful! Helium can kill you

Hi, Dolly: Last week, two teens working in a party store in our town were 'fooling around' taking hits off the helium tank so they could talk like Minnie Mouse. One of the teens dropped to the floor dead. The doctor says he literally 'blew his lungs apart.' Let your readers know that while the helium in a balloon may be harmless, the compressed gas in the tanks can be deadly. — B.R. in California good message to every clown who inhales just to say "Howdy" in a stupid squeaky voice. (I've always felt that puttin' anything in my pretty pink lungs, except good old oxygen, was flat-out dumb.)

Do I have to send presents to everybody?

Hi, Dolly: When you receive an announcement in the mail from an acquaintance, a friend or family member, no matter how remote, must you send them a gift? We get birth, graduation and anniversary announcements from people we haven't seen in a decade, then I get angry because I feel trapped into buying a present! Am I just being selfish? — Sidney in Green Acres

Dear Sidney: You're letting anger splatter mud on good sense, I'll say that. If someone thinks enough of you to send an announcement — even if they are fishing for a gift — you should at least fork over two bucks for a card return, that's their problem. On the other hand, if you feel like sticking your card to a little kerchief or bracelet or fountain pen, I'm sure it will be appreciated.

Should my brother-in-law be my new gynecologist?

Hi, Dolly: My new brother-in-law is the best OB/GYN doctor in our state. He asked me if I wanted to switch from my gynecologist to him as his services are free to family members. It would be great to receive free medical care but I'd be too embarrassed. Am I crazy? — Uncomfortable in Birmingham

Dear Uncomfortable: No. He is. According to the American Medical Association, it is unprofessional and unethical to provide a family member with free medical services. If the authorities found out, your brother-in-law's license would be at risk. Explain what you've learned. If your brother-in-law listens, it could stop him from getting into mucho trouble. Needless to say, keep going to your current OB/GYN.

My fiancée is obsessed with Tom Cruise

Hi, Dolly: My fiancée is infatuated with Tom Cruise. She has pictures of him tacked up all over her room and a tattoo on her arm with his name inside a heart. She sends flowers and cards to him. She even yells his name when we are intimate. How can I get her to stop? — Rodney in Idaho

Dear Rodney: Many of us ordinary folk fantasize about certain celebrities, though we keep it kinda quiet — especially when we're in a tub-for-two — and the candle tends to grow low after a while. Your lady is over the top and may be on her way to becoming a stalker. Suggest that she get help. If that doesn't work, choose some wall coverings that appeal to you both. If she won't agree, tell her how cute you think those pictures are. Bet that'll poison the fantasy well pretty quick. (By the way, bless you for hanging in there with your woman. A lot of less understanding men would have walked out ages ago.)

Man requires operation after he sticks to his guns!

By LUIGI PECORINO

AMARILLO, Texas – For rodeo cowboy Johnny Wilds, the oft-used expression of unflinching determination – 'Stick to your guns' – recently took on a somewhat more embarrassing meaning.

"My girlfriend Debbie popped into my garage workshop," Wilds recalled. "She was trying out a new digital camera and wanted to take a shot of me with my guns. So I stopped the repair work I was doing, and grabbed my trusty Colt Sharp Shooters.

Debbie took a couple of photos, then asked me to put the guns in a holster and draw – and I couldn't.

"They were glued solid to my hands!" Wilds said. "The glue I'd been using to fix parts of a vintage flintlock had probably spilled on the guns. The stuff is supposed to be the strongest glue in the world and I'm gonna have to agree, because for the life of me I could not pry those firearms from my hands."

the embarrassment and call a few buddies to come over and help.

"They couldn't budge those guns, either," he said. "And it hurt like the dickens when they tried pulling them off. They finally had to drive me to the hospital emergency room."

After a two-hour operation, physicians successfully separated Wilds from his guns.

"It would've taken shorter, but the surgeon had to be real careful," Wilds said. "Those guns were loaded.

"I'm never going to think of the term 'handguns' the same way.

"In the future, I'm gonna make every effort not to stick to my guns," he said. "Of course, now my buddies have something to laugh about for the next 10 years, but what

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Movie theaters are cluttered with remakes, the pace of computer technology has slowed, and the next mission of our country's space program will bring us to the moon — again.

"Human ingenuity has hit a wall," said think tank analyst Morton Uppley, who actually crunches the data from think tanks, "and several new government reports say there's no end in sight."

The first sign of trouble came late last year, when a top-secret experimental airplane commissioned by the U.S. Navy rolled off the assembly lines of Prior Aerospace, Inc.

"Our inspectors reviewed the aircraft and realized that it was exactly the same as the last plane our contractor had developed for the military," said Rear Admiral Buck Ward.

Admiral Ward immediately checked the rest of the military's advanced research projects. He found that 80 percent of the supposedly cutting-edge technology developed for the armed forces had already been invented, declassified and spun off for civilian use.

"They discovered that most of their X-projects were actually ex-projects," Uppley commented.

Hastily commissioned surveys outside the military revealed that civilian innovation was faltering at the same alarming rate. The experts agreed on the cause: Excessive inventiveness in the 20th century was to blame.

"We spent our ideas too quickly," said Uppley. "In a few short years we invented the automobile, air travel, the Theory of Relativity, manned space flight, nuclear fission, genetic engineering, television, Weekly World News and so on. We've had poor innovation planning and now we're paying the price."

While governments and research institutions worldwide are running on empty think tanks, a new initiative to save progress is already in place. The Bush administration has appointed Edward Vance as overseer of Washington's new Department of Ingenuity.

program, 'Think Before You Think,' is already being tested in the town of Headway, Miss., where television and newspaper ads discourage pointless daydreaming, looking at both sides of an issue and playing devil's advocate.

"If this fails, the country might Reserve, a stockpile of unused American innovations from the 1930s to 1950s," Vance said.

The Idea Czar remains tight-lipped about the concepts locked in the reserve, but reliable sources have showed Weekly World News archived inventions such as the the Homemaker's Nuclear Oven.

Critics of these programs point out a fatal flaw: "In trying to conserve creativity, they're using creativity like crazy," said Uppley.

However, Vance sees no alternative but to stay the course.

"If none of these emergency up plan ready, called 'No Brainchild Left Behind,' " Vance added. "We'll relocate smart little kids to an island and see what they can come up with over time."

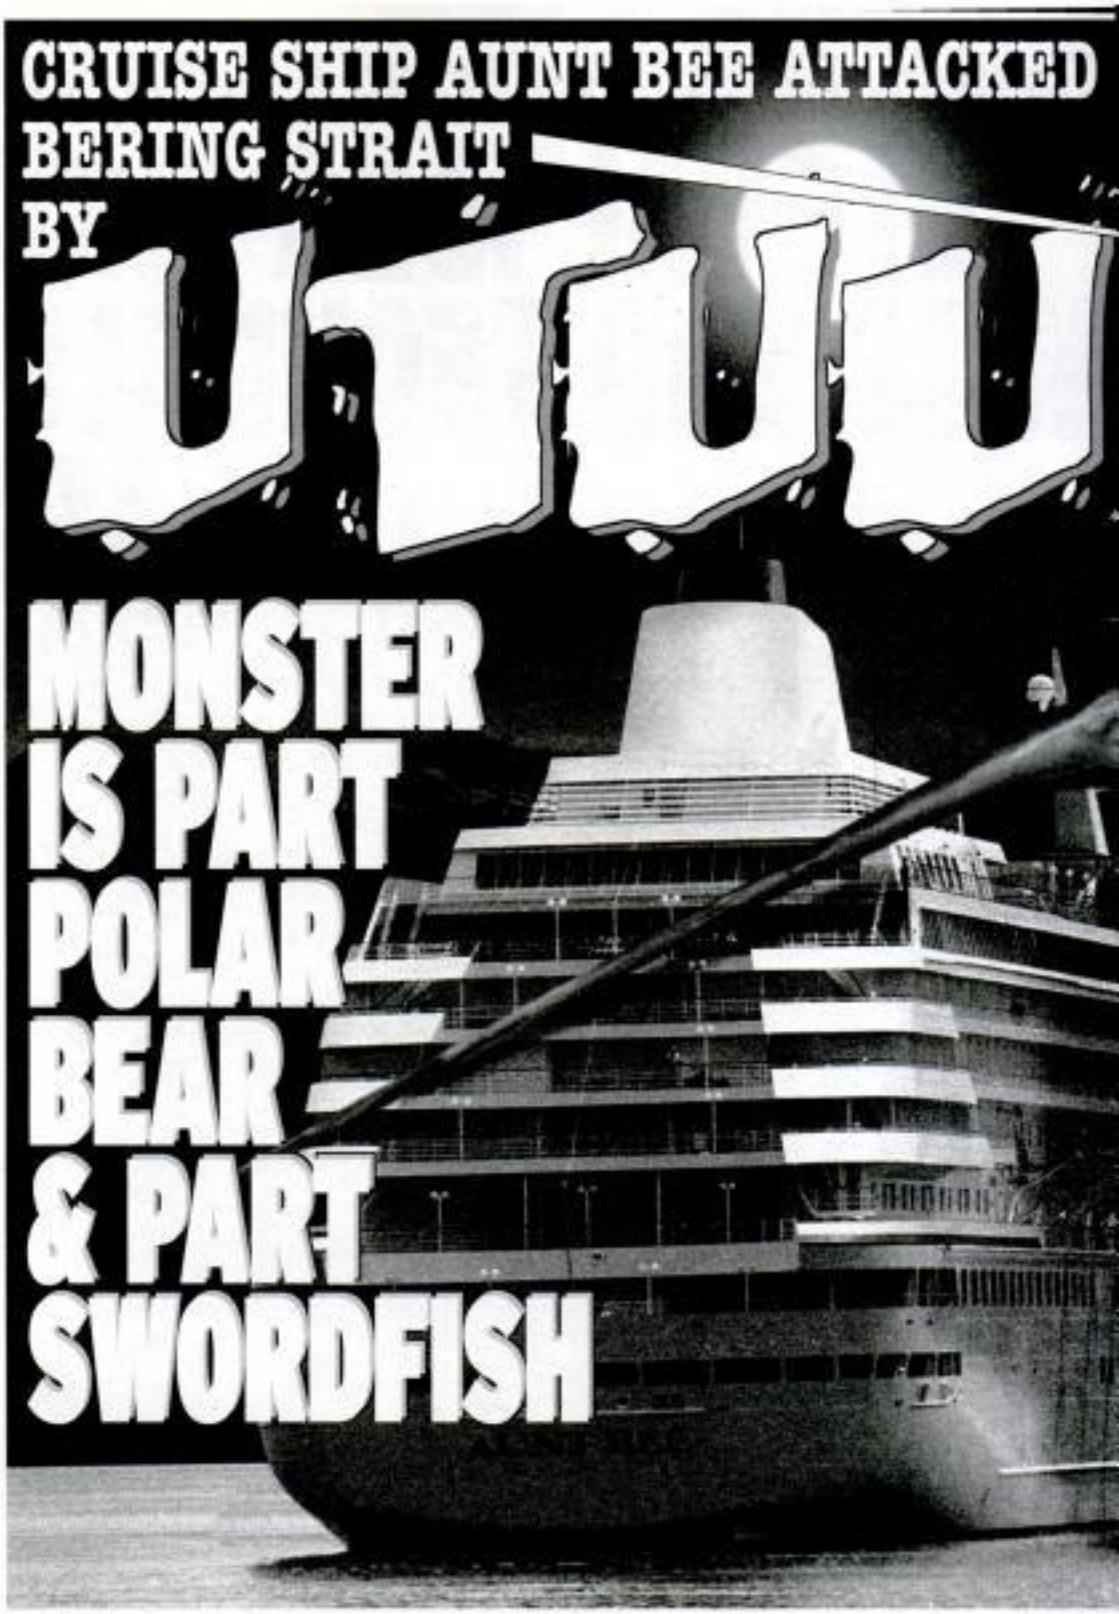
CRUISE SHIP AUNT BEE ATTACKED BERING STRAIT BY UTUU

MONSTER IS PART POLAR BEAR & PART SWORDFISH



By DICK SIEGEL

NOME, Alaska — A pleasure cruise in the Bering Strait was recently attacked and sunk under mysterious circumstances. The sole survivor of the assault on the liner Aunt Bee was first mate Sid Rodrigo, who had been on watch when — according to his sworn testimony — horror struck from beneath the frozen sea.

"We were five days out of Anchorage," Rodrigo told Weekly World News. "Passengers were sightseeing in dinghies while others were fishing from the deck. We were reeling in some big catches when suddenly the fishing went dry. There was nothing — not even a snow cod. Suddenly, one of the passengers pointed toward the rocky coastline, at the bloodied remains of a beached whale. The poor, dead giant looked like it had a losing encounter with the propellers of a submarine.

"We notified the Oceanic Environmental Agency and recalled all the boats," he went on. "We continued the cruise, hoping the dead whale was a fluke of some kind. It wasn't.

"I was topside about 3 a.m. when this sloshing sound rolled in from an approaching fog bank. I thought it might be an iceberg so I alerted the bridge. They had already picked it up on sonar.

"We were about to change course when the large mass bobbed up on the whitecaps and headed toward the boat at over 60 knots. Icebergs don't usually move that fast and I chuckled to the navigator that it might be Utuu, the sea devil of local Aleut legend.

"I was whistling past a graveyard, though I didn't know it at the time.

"I squinted through my night vision binoculars. As I focused, a deafening roar bellowed from the fog. Moments later I saw a massive object that looked like a bear. A really big bear.

"Rising up from the water was an enormous white polar bear over 50 feet tall. It had a pointed snout and a big fin on its back — just like a swordfish! It lumbered toward us as I sounded the alarm.

"Fred Kilgallen, the boat's scuba instructor, was on deck within moments. He fired a spear gun at slapped Kilgallen overboard with a swipe of its massive paw. My crewmate flew at least 20 feet up and was swallowed by the night.

"Then the polar bear-thing — which I knew now was Utuu — leashed a torrent of small arms fire to no avail. I held tight to the railing as Utuu angrily shook the boat from side to side. One by one, people flew into the icy sea. Then Utuu pushed the boat from his OEA reports that fresh animal carcasses have been reported by natives inhabiting the region.

"They say it's Utuu," Professor Bronson reported. "If it is, let's hope there's just one of him —

Wart thwart

DETERMINED to get people to stop staring at her, a Vermont woman had a rather large wart removed from the tip of her nose. For some reason, however, it always grew back within a couple of weeks.

"I've had it taken off three times, but no doctor has been able to get rid of it for good," she said.

After the fourth removal, elders in her city held a meeting to discuss the possibility the woman was a witch. "Witches have warts," was the stand one took. "So if this wart won't go away, then she was meant to have it and must be a witch."

The rest agreed and, rationalizing it as their "public duty," they agreed to report her to the authorities. She was burned at the stake three days later.

Star power

A MAN actually caught a falling star!

"I saw it coming and grabbed it out of the sky just like a pop fly!" Jack Binno said. "I see shooting stars all the time, but I've never heard of anyone actually catching one."

Binno said he phoned NASA to see if the fallen star was safe to take it home and they assured him it would only harm him if he ingested it. "Obviously I wasn't going to eat it, but I don't know – anything that glows by itself like that – you just have to wonder," he explained.

Thrilled to find it was safe, he took his catch home, placed it on display in the center of his coffee table and "lit the whole living room for free with it."

Falling stars are typically just meteors, NASA explained, which meant this must have been some sort of new phenomenon. "We're fairly positive it was a chunk of frozen light from the supercold depths of space – not a star," a spokesman said. "But there wasn't any reason to rain on the man's parade or confuse him with details. It was much easier to just let him think he'd caught a shooting star."

JEREMY Walker said he snapped 15 rolls of film during his family's Maine vacation – but this is his favorite shot. "Not only is the coastline beautiful, but there's a UFO in it," he said. Experts attempted to verify or disprove whether the unidentified object in the photo was an actual UFO, but no conclusive evidence could be drawn. Over the years, Walker has stood his ground, however, insisting the UFO is real.

MOM-UP BOOKS

By MICHAEL ROVIN

OJAI, Calif. — Aware of the fact that more and more mothers are working, author Ellen Foley has designed a new tool to help them raise — and discipline — their children.

"They're called mom-up books," said Foley. "Like the classic pop-up books, they use three dimensional displays. But they don't tell a story. Each new spread features mom popping up to instruct the child on what to do in certain situations. A small voice chip makes sure that the command is heard as well as read."

For example, the opening page of Foley's first mom-up book, School Day, depicts a child in bed.

"When you open to that spread, the door opens and the mother enters," said Foley. "The voice says, 'Get out of bed before you miss the school bus!' At the same time the child leaps out of bed."

After being reminded to clean up his or her breakfast plate and brush their teeth, the child is admonished to behave on the bus.

"Upon arriving at school, there's a spread that shows a naughty child sitting in the principal's office," Foley said. "A mother's voice warns, 'If you're bad in school you'll be in big trouble when you get home!' "

The other books in the series are After School Activities and Bedtime.

While many educators are critical of the books' old-world authoritarian tone, mothers have expressed satisfaction with what Foley has done.

"I read these series to my 5-year-old son every night," said Maggie Smith. "The book mom and I actually play good cop, bad cop. I come off being pretty nice by comparison."

"I make sure my daughter Sally takes it with her to school," said Joanne Wenn. "Book mom is like an inspiring guardian angel — or fearful avenging angel, depending on how Sally behaves."

Due to the success of her series, Foley is getting ready to launch a new one.

THE LIFE AND MUSINGS OF OSCAR MILDE

A Biography by C.H. Cadbury

CADBURY writes a dull book about a dull guy.

Reviewed by DICK SIEGEL

WHAT little there is known about Oscar Wilde's younger brother, Stephen, has been expanded upon in this bland new biography.

Working as an accountant, Stephen Wilde felt that he too had something to say. He began writing as 'Oscar Milde,' a self-described 'ordinary bloke.' Unlike his famous brother, Milde was also a practicing heterosexual. In fact, according to the biography, he practiced quite often.

Free thinking and wild, Bohemian art was all the rage in Wilde's artistic circle. By contrast, Milde's writing was dull and uninspired. His lone patron was burlesque producer Duncan Loveless, a drinking chum who shared Milde's love of women.

Milde's first play, The Importance Of Being Ernestine, and eventually became queen. The play was dismissed as improbable and closed after a single performance.

Milde then attempted a novel, The Silhouette of Doreen Black, about a washerwoman who scrubbed pots and aged rather quickly due to her hard life. The London Chronicle declared the novel to be "as banal as the dishwater it describes in such sudsy splendor."

After two more attempts at writing novels – Lady Windermere's Phantom of the Opera and Ideal Animal Husbandry, Milde put away his quill and returned to accounting.

Milde remained relatively unknown until his biographer, accountant C.H. Cadbury, stumbled across the manuscripts

Cadbury tries to make a case for Milde as "a realist who believed that stories could be told 'by the numbers,' as it were." He was wrong, of course, as the enduring popularity of his far more imaginative brother demonstrates.

Unfortunately, like Milde's completely ordinary life, this biography is dry, uninteresting reading.

BUCHAREST, Romania — One of the most famous landmarks in Romania is the castle of the infamous Vlad the Impaler, a bloodthirsty nobleman also known as Dracula. However, the ancient countryside boasts an even more remarkable and frightening home.

By MICHAEL ROVIN

"The Cuza Estate was built 200 years ago," said Romanian historian Emil Balint. "Unfortunately, the impatient Baron Cuza built the house on a field of wolfbane — a plant believed to be a cause of werewolfery."

Immediately after its comple-

moon it actually transformed into a lycomanse — a wolf mansion — that ate unwary travelers.

"The Cuzas abandoned the legends are really true.

"I arrived at the estate during the late afternoon," he said. "The place looked like something from an evil fairy tale, overgrown with gnarled trees, vines and high grasses. But I wasn't going to let fear and superstition keep me from discovering the truth. I opened my backpack, ate a late lunch and "The countryside went pale and, before my eyes, the house began to transform.

"Moss started to form on the walls while thick thorns sprouted around the doors. The bars on the first floor windows broke off on the bottom and lengthened downward. The upper windows, on the side, elongated toward the top like pointy ears.

grow larger, more menacing."

Moments later, the gabled structure rose from its foundation and moved toward Balint. Though terrified, Balint was not unprepared. He reached into his backpack and withdrew a can of silver spray paint. He proceeded to coat the house.

"Whether it's a werewolf or a were-house, the holy purity of silver will always defeat them," covered most of the front facade the house stopped moving. I continued to paint until it turned back into a regular home."

While the Romanian people were thrilled that the Cuza curse had been broken, authorities were not so happy that private property had been vandalized.

"It may have been against the law, but it was necessary," said an unapologetic Balint. "If ever Researcher determines CINNAMON IS THE SPICE OF LIFE!

By MARK MILLER

LACONIA, N.H. – 'Variety is the spice of life' means that life is more exciting when you try different types of experiences. However, National Spice Council researcher Steve Levey began to wonder if the popular expression had a more literal meaning.

"It occurred to me," explained Levey, "that if you were to make a list of all the world's spices, along with their uses and benefits, one spice would probably stand out as having the greatest use and benefit to mankind. That spice would truly be the spice of life. I decided to find out which one that was."

Levey and his team of researchers studied every major spice, compiling data and statistics and consulting with foreign spice experts.

"When all the data was in it became clear that the standout spice, by far, was cinnamon," he said. "It's an ancient spice mentioned several times in the Old Testament, which gives it great historical and religious import. It is equally suited for both hot and subtle foods, as well as being widely used for flavoring tea, coffee, buns, stewed fruits and various desserts.

"Cinnamon is immensely popular in China and the rest of Asia, as well as all regions where Arab influence is felt. It is big in northern and eastern Africa."

"Don't get me wrong," Levey added. "Variety is all well and good. But if you're looking for the real spice of life, grab yourself cinnamon."

In related news, advocates of 'thyme' are thinking of changing its spelling to make that spice 'of the essence.'

WORK-RELATED STRESS DISORDERS

Which professions are more likely to make you go mental?

By JONATHAN PIKE

CHICAGO — Although postal workers have gotten the most attention for "losing it" on the job — that is, "going postal" — a study by the Chicago Center For Job Stress found a comparable number of disgruntled workers in other occupations.

"The post office has gotten the most publicity because it's a government job," said Dr. George Harris. "It came to symbolize a bureaucracy that pushed frustrated workers over the edge. But with one in 200 employees who go over the edge, the post office is far from the worst offender.

"For instance, one in every 22 orthodontists 'go dental' before their second year," said Dr. Harris. "Staring into foul-smelling mouths all day and fitting stubborn braces in tight places cause them to flip. They start tearing out people's teeth and sending them on wild, spinning rides in the chair.

"Then there are accountants, like the one who went berserk last month and beat a client's metal filing cabinet out of shape with a calculator," said Dr. Harris. "They 'go accountal' after years of dealing with other people's wealth while they, themselves, remain stuck in the middle class."

Dr. Harris also found patterns of workers who go bankal, cookal, computer programmal, plumbal, priestal and paralegal for reasons that range from faulty technology to dead-end positions to abusive bosses.

"I'm also convinced that there are some individuals who 'go presidental,' " said Dr. Harris. "I won't name names, but when they get frustrated or stressed they go to war."

GRAPH-ITI: Math majors take it to the streets

By MICHAEL ROVIN

BOSTON — "It's something we'd never seen before," said Sgt. Jim Crass of the Boston Police Department. "A few days after the new school year began, we encountered a new type of graffiti on buildings and overpasses.

"It wasn't the usual gang colors and symbols," he said. "These were numbers, geometric figures and complex mathematic equations."

After staking out nearby Boston Community College of Arithmetic for several nights, undercover police were able to identify the vandals.

"We followed two juniors as they left the campus and ducked into the alley postulate on the back of the shop."

The students were arrested and taken to the police station. There, they told police why they were creating what they called 'graph-iti'.

"We hate the fact that everyone in class uses calculators," said Stanley Tomlinson. "They're a crutch that dulls the mind."

"We wanted to make a big, colorful statement about the joys of doing math longhand," said William Bowen.

After deciding that the students were simply overzealous learners and not criminals, police let them go.

"Of course, we made them clean up the messes they made," Crass said. "And of

This kid's a real... KNUCKLEHEAD

By JONATHAN PIKE

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — 14-year-old Simon Phist is the only student in the conservative Memphis Regional High School who is allowed to wear a hat in class.

"It was only fair to the boy," said principal Richard Shaw. "We didn't want the other students making fun of him."

Phist has what doctors call a 'prehensile cranium.' In lay terms, he's a 'knucklehead.'

"While he was in the womb, Simon began to grow an extra hand from his skull," said Dr. Philip Marlon. "Due to the cramped position of the fetus only part of the fingers made it through. As a result, Simon was born with a set of knuckles on his head."

At first, Phist suffered no immediate ill effects from the abnormality.

"Other than the bony protrusions, Simon developed like any other child," said Dr. Marlon. "But that started to change once he learned to walk."

As Phist grew and gained more mobility he invariably bumped his head.

"He never quite adjusted to the extra few inches," said Mrs. Phist. "It also didn't help that many of his friends gave him high fives up there now and then."

The repetitive blows to the head started affecting Phist's concentration.

"He was like a boxer taking solid blows to the skull," said Dr. Marlon. "Since half of the hand is still embedded inside his cranium, slight blows to the hand had detrimental effects on his brain. Over time they dulled his mind."

Despite the drawbacks, Dr. Marlon theorized that Phist's condition may not be a deformity.

"It's very possible that Phist represents an evolutionary step for mankind," said Dr. Marlon. "Perhaps this is nature's way of allowing us to reach higher shelves, change light bulbs more easily or invent new ways to slam-dunk.

"You might say, with all respect to political correctness, that this boy is the first wave of truly 'hand-i-capped' individuals."

TEEN CAN MAKE HIS SKIN CRAWL!

By MICHAEL ROVIN

PIERRE, S.D. – One night early in January, 13-year-old Buck Pepe went to sleep in his bed and awoke on the kitchen floor.

"We thought he had sleepwalked," said Mrs. Pepe. "This was the first time he'd ever done that so we let it go."

The next night Buck was found on the stairs. They decided to let him sleep in their room until they were sure this odd phase had stopped.

"We were afraid he might hurt himself," said Mr. Pepe.

On the third night, however, the Pepes discovered that Buck wasn't sleepwalking – not exactly.

"We were awakened by a strange rubbing sound," said Mr. Pepe. "Buck was on the floor, asleep. It was dark in the room but it sounded as though he was crawling across the room."

Mr. Pepe turned on the light

"His flesh was rippling as he moved, like waves on the ocean," said Mrs. Pepe. "His skin was actually crawling!"

Buck was rushed to the hospital for observation.

"We discovered that Buck suffers from a rare condition called Autonomic Epidermal Motility," Dr. Lawrence Kelp explained. "Human skin is an organ. Other organs function automatically; when the conditions are right, skin can do the same."

Dr. Kelp theorized that the boy's fondness for the skin of Thanksgiving-Christmas season – powered up the latent ability in his own skin cells.

"During the daytime, the normal motion of the body and Buck's upright position hide the movement of the skin," Dr. Kelp went on. "But at night Buck's skin gets – well, creepy."

Dr. Kelp gave Buck a muscle relaxer that targeted only dermal sinew. So far, it has worked.

"Still, it may be just a stopgap measure," Dr. Kelp explained. "We'll wait to see if this passes before we take the

Why is it so easy to pig out on pasta?

Dear Mr. Horse: Why is it so easy to overeat certain foods, like pasta?

Dianne Jacobs,
Los Angeles, Calif.

Dear Dianne: Our bodies monitor our nutritional intake and let us know when we've eaten what we need. Foods like pasta are highly processed. That means a lot of the nutritional value has been stripped from it. As a result, our bodies take longer to signal that we've had enough. If you eat wholesome, fresh, natural foods you'll find that you're satisfied after eating much less. That's why you'll never see horses overeat since we are fed only hay, oats, carrots and apples.

Dear Mr. Horse: Why is it bad to eat food before you go to bed?

Dear Mr. Horse: I just became a vegetarian and I feel weak and sick sometimes. Am I doing something wrong?

Wendy Hastings,

Dear Wendy: Actually, you're doing something right! Junk food is like a drug. Your body gets accustomed to eating highly concentrated amounts of sugar, oil and fat. It's no different than when a smoker quits smoking and feels awful, even though the smoke is bad for him. Once your body adapts to this new diet of fresh fruits and vegetables, you'll feel better than ever. Trust me, I once had a sugar cube addiction. It took me months to kick it.

THE ALL NEW MATTHEW DAEMON TRADING CARDS SERIES!

SOS MATTHEW DAEMON
Trading Card #4

Height: Approx. 8 ft.
Weight: Approx. 1,400 lbs.
Location: Massapequa, Long Island
Characteristics and behavior: While not prone to violence, the Stone Giant nevertheless terrorized local residents as it slowly stomped across highways and backyards. The creature strongly resembled the statues of Easter Island, and for good reason. As discovered by Matt Daemon, the giant was indeed a long lost descendant of the famous, enigmatic monoliths. Daemon arranged for the bizarre being to be lashed to weather balloons, which carried it off to the

BLOODLETTING BEYOND

People stumbled blood leaking cuts on

BY DICK SIEGEL

WATER MARK, Pa. — Deep in his lair beneath Grant's Tomb, Matthew Daemon S.O.S. (Seeker of Obscure Supernaturals) was calibrating the psychic parabolic locator on his super computerized World Weird Network. Suddenly, his fax machine began beeping. Page after page spilled out with nothing on them. Puzzled, the Wizard of Weird *69ed the mystery caller. The high-pitched whine of a fax modem assaulted his ears. A moment later he could hear a voice wailing from the phone speaker.

"Come quick! The blood! The blood! It's horrible!"

"This is Matthew Daemon!" shouted the Sultan of Strange. "Who is this and why are you trying to send faxes?"

"Mr. Daemon, this is Inspector Melvin Hobbes of Water Mark," moaned the caller. "We were trying to fax 'it' to you!"

"What do you mean 'it?' "

"For analysis — there's blood everywhere!"

As the inspector spoke, Daemon zeroed in on Water Mark with the psychic parabola. The small town was hot with extradimensional mystic energy.

"It's a deadly sheet of paper," Hobbes went on. "It's come alive and is attacking everyone. Paper cuts are inflicting gory

There was no response.

"It doesn't matter," Daemon muttered. "They all have the same weakness."

Donning his hat and duster, the freak-phantom-fighter grabbed a pair of scissors and stuffed them in a brown paper bag before leaving his underground headquarters. Outside, he picked up a rock from the park beside Grant's Tomb. Then he cabbed over to the port authority the bend and entered the rustic hamlet, there was no mistaking the foul horror that was still afoot. People stumbled through the streets, blood leaking from multiple paper cuts on their hands and faces. Pursuing them, its midsection dented with a malevolent crease, was a flying sheet of paper!

"Yes. How did you know?"

"I've seen your picture in Weekly World News," the man replied. "Plus, you're the only one who hasn't been slashed."

"And I won't be," Daemon vowed.

Keeping an eye on the ferocious foolscap as it fluttered here and there, Daemon placed the rock attack and quickly wrapped itself around the stone. No sooner had it done so than Daemon pulled the scissors from concealment inside the bag and, in a flurry of blurred motion, cut the sheet of paper into tiny pieces. Soon the confetti was too small to harm anyone and was blown away by a strong gust of how to stop it?" Hobbes asked as he applied a Band-aid to his cheek.

"My psychic locator determined there was a rift in the dimensional plane in an office supply closet in Water Mark," Daemon revealed. "I suspected a formless entity find — a piece of paper. I believe the entity was the vanguard for an invasion. Its cutting assault was an attempt to allow other entities to come to our world."

"Good Lord!" said Hobbes. "We would have been reamed!"

scissors," Daemon winked.

"When this entity doesn't report back, I don't think you'll have to worry about any others following."

With that, the Master Monster Hunter bagged his scissors and took the

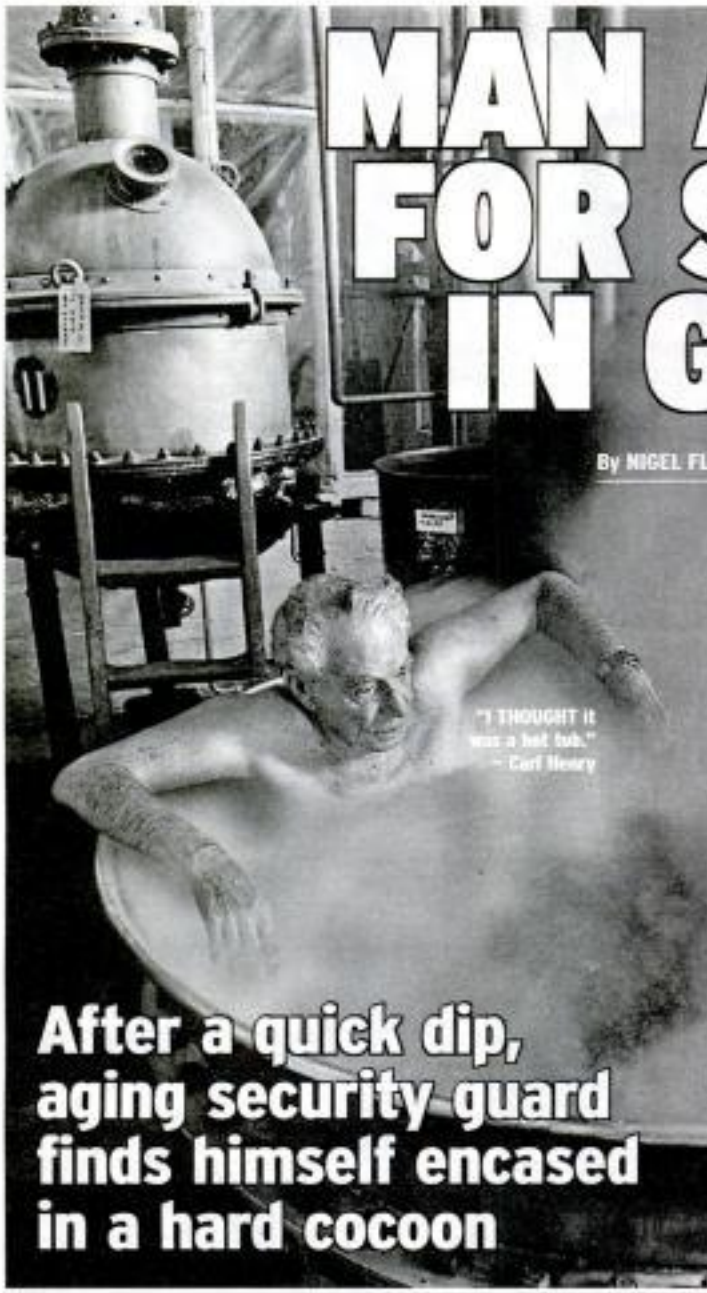
MAN ARRESTED FOR SWIMMING IN GENE POOL



After a quick dip, aging security guard finds himself encased in a hard cocoon

By NIGEL FLEMING

WESTWOOD, Calif. — Elderly janitor Carl Henry was exhausted. Taking a break from his nighttime shift at the Institute for Better Life Studies, he entered a room with a large vat of swirling liquid.

"It was a restricted lab where rejuvenation experiments are being conducted," said chief scientist Dr. Stanley Owens. "According to the security camera, Henry removed his shoes and socks and then peeled off his shirt and pants. He stepped into the bubbling pool apparently thinking it was a hot tub.

"It wasn't. It was a vat of experimental DNA — a gene pool."

Henry ducked under the surface and let the liquid soak into every pore. Suddenly, it formed a hard shell and the janitor sunk to the bottom. Henry was submerged for more than 15 minutes before security guards responded to a silent alarm.

"We reached in with poles and brought him to the surface," stated watchman Jesse Tucker. He chuckled. "Ol' Henry was encased in a giant cocoon. There must've been air trapped inside. He was shoutin' for us to get him out."

Rather than tamper with the mysterious casing, the men rushed Henry to the emergency room at Martha Jefferson Hospital. There, medics freed Henry with a bone saw and pronounced him in excellent condition.

"He was actually in better than perfect health," Dr. Owens said. "That was the purpose of our gene pool — to restore health to the infirm.

"Ordinarily we would have fired Henry, but he saved us months of experimentation. Plus, there's a practical side. He now does the work of three men!"

GLOBAL WARMING RUINS DESSERT

FALMOUTH, Jamaica – A recent study has shown that increased global warming has negatively affected the density of gelatin, giving it a runny quality.

"The congealing process requires a stable degree of coolness to achieve its ideal state," said researcher Paul Reeze. "With the ozone damage and warming trend we've seen in the past decade, gelatin has consistently lost several degrees of consistency once it's placed on the table."

Reeze said even refrigeration isn't enough to ensure proper gelling. "Thirty years ago gelatin made better molds, lasted longer at room temperature and jiggled more animatedly," he

WASHINGTON, D.C. — For the past seven years, historian Henry Clemens has been lobbying New York congressional representative Paul Simmons on a matter of great historical significance.

By MICHAEL ROVIN

"Unlike your newspaper's Ed Anger, I think that Presidents Day is a wonderful holiday," said Clemens. "We should be celebrating the greatest leaders of our nation instead of spreading the adoration thin over an entire month. But I also believe we've made a terrible oversight by ignoring another important political figure."

Clemens believes that Congress must establish a Vice Presidents Day.

"We need a Monday holiday in March and Thomas Marshall, John Calhoun and Al Gore were all born then," he said. "What could be a better fit?"

Clemens argues passionately for his cause.

"First of all, there were some heavy hitters sitting in that seat," Clemens said.

"George Washington's vice president was future president John Adams. When Adams became president, his VP was Thomas Jefferson. If those names have giving one to a turkey?!

"Secondly, speaking of names, Lincoln's first VP was Hannibal Hamlin. Grant's was Schuyler Colfax," said Clemens. "How could those extraordinary names be forgotten, while dull presidential monickers like Benjamin Harrison and William McKinley are honored in the big-blanket 'Presidents Day'?

"Finally, the vice president is a heartbeat from the presidency," Clemens went on. "Fourteen of them have gone on to become president. That, too, merits a day to celebrate the men and the office."

Unfortunately, so far, Representative Simmons has not been encouraged to act.

"With respect, we'd have a tough time rallying support for a Daniel D. Tompkins or Alben W. Barkley Day," Simmons said. "Besides, we seem to have a vice president who's running the country. Mr.

5 b. This is when witches are at their most powerful and the strangest things have been known to occur.

6 a. In England, witchcraft was a felony (a crime against the state) and punishable by hanging. Elsewhere in Europe, witchcraft was a heresy (a crime against the church) and punishable by being burned at the stake.

7 a. The cauldron bubbled with "Eye of newt, toe of frog, wool of bat, tongue of dog."

8 d. A woman named Helen Duncan was convicted under England's Witchcraft Act because she seemed to have clairvoyant knowledge of the country's D-Day preparations. She was imprisoned for nine months. The Witchcraft Act was repealed in 1951.

9 c. Nineteen of them were hanged and one was pressed to death by having stones piled on top of him. Thirteen other accused witches died in prison. In May 1693, the governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony pardoned the accused and the witch trials ended.

10 d. This indicates why so many innocent women and men were charged. Their deaths made the government richer through 'legal' means!

11 b. The Bible says "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." (Exodus 22:18)

12 b. Wiccans call themselves witches and organize themselves into covens – however, they do not practice black magic. Wiccan religion is neo-pagan and earth-centered, with ancient rituals and practices that include worship of the Goddess and a Horned God.

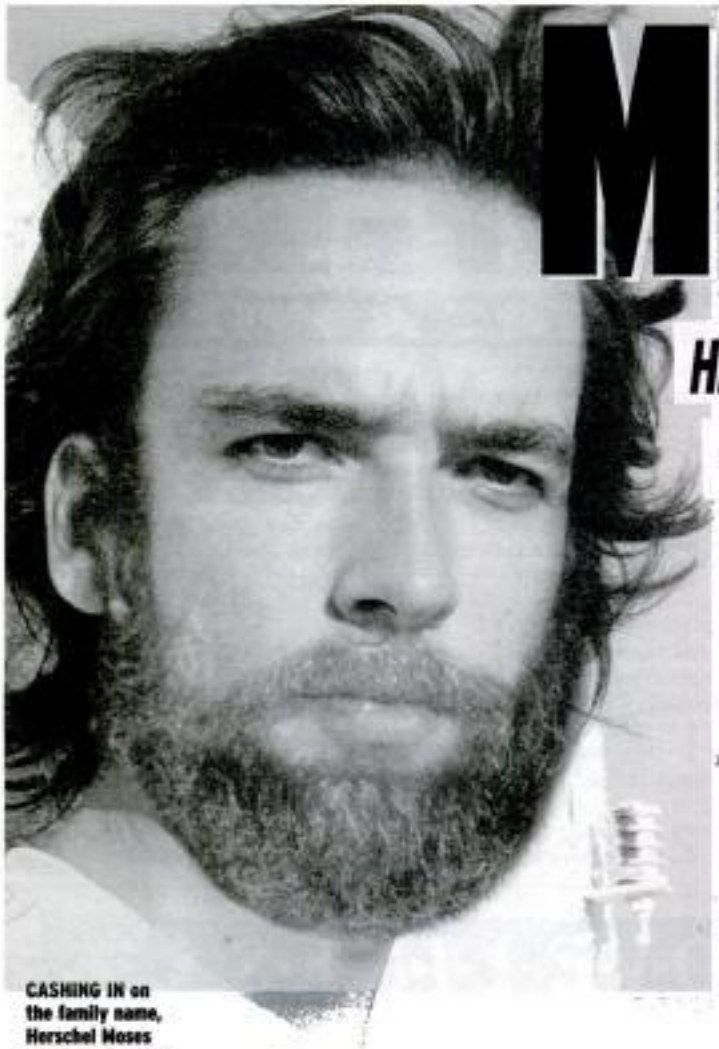
HERSCHEL MOSES CAN'T PART THE SEA - BUT HE SURE KNOWS HOW TO PACK



CASHING IN on the family name, Herschel Moses even grew a beard to look just like his ancestor depicted in the Bible.

By LEONARD McCOY

TEL AVIV, Israel — For six months now, tourists have been lining up five and six hours to tour the Red Sea on the boat of a very special guide.

"Yes, I'm a descendant of the original Moses," said 33-year-old Herschel Moses. "The affiliation has been very good for business — though it's also caused a lot of problems."

Earlier this year, Israeli scientists matched Herschel's DNA with strands of a beard that were found on the original tablets of the Ten Commandments (Weekly World News, June 27, 2005).

"It's not easy having a relative who was the world's foremost prophet," said Herschel. "I feel like I have to live up to people's expectations.

"I can never be righteous enough and that makes me a little testy. Yes, I sell a lot of souvenir stone tablets and tiny plastic bushes with little lights in them. But many of the tourists think I talk to God. I mean, I do, but only when I pray. And trust me — I don't get special favors. Do you see a Jaguar parked in my spot at the dock?"

ally tourists demand refunds when Herschel isn't able to deliver on a request that's asked every day on every tour: Parting the sea. At least twice a day he has to point out the no-refund-for-non-miracles contract on the back of the stub.

"It's not like I haven't tried," he admitted. "I practiced on a pool but nothing ever came of it. There must have been something about that staff my ancestor carried." He sighed. "Though I did re-create one miracle, sort of. Some guy got really angry when I wouldn't summon a swarm of locusts. He attacked me and I had to sock him in the nose. He stumbled overboard.

"I fished him out but for a moment — a brief one, but satisfying — I had turned the water into blood!"

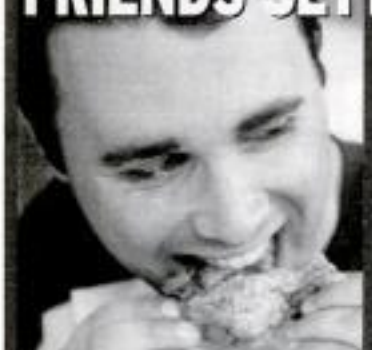
FRIENDS SETTLE ALL ARGUMENTS BY PICKING A BONE!



By DIMITRI BELUGA

CATOOSA, Okla. – The expression 'I've got a bone to pick with you' is what a person says when they disagree with something you've said or done. Until now, however, no one knew how that phrase originated.

"It started one day when Horace Applebee and me was eatin' some chicken drumsticks," recalled 39-year-old Carl Fleidermeyer. "Horace finished one

There's enough meat left to feed a family of four.' I commenced to pick slivers o' chicken meat off that bone. Horace covered his embarrassment by saying, 'Ya missed some,' and took the bone back and picked off a tiny piece of meat. Then I took it back and did the same. Pretty soon we were fightin' over it. Eventually, I got the last piece o' meat.

"That gave us an idea," Fleidermeyer said. "From then on, drumstick. I'd pick some meat off it and hand it to Horace. He'd pick some meat off it and hand it back to me, and so on. The one who picked off the very last bit of meat was the winner.

"We've been doin' it that way for nearly 30 years and it works like a charm.

"It works better than the idea we had before that," Fleidermeyer chuckled. "I don't think either of us would've won an argument by

HOTHEAD BLOWS 246 DEGREES!

He can get a real head of steam going!

DRIGGS, Idaho — Bald, 33-year-old Darryl Porter is a hothead in the traditional sense: He gets irrationally angry over small things. But he also has a head that regularly registers 246 degrees.

"Frankly, I'm surprised he's still alive," observed Dr. Tony Lazerime, his personal physician at the University of Southern Idaho School of Medicine. "The average temperature of the human head ranges from 96.8 degrees up to 105.8 degrees, in cases of extreme fever. Mr. Porter's temperature is nearly 150 degrees beyond that. Why that's not affecting his heart, brain and other internal organs is a mystery to me."

By MARK MILLER

Dr. Mac Peterman, a recent graduate of the Juarez, Mexico, International Correspondence School of Medicine — and a Weekly World News consultant — explained.

"Mr. Porter appears to suffer from Pressure Cooker Syndrome, when one part of the body lets off steam thereby keeping the rest of the person at the proper temperature. People afflicted with PCS have a special layer of skin at the vent-point — typically the head, since heat rises — which keeps the temperature from cooking the brain."

The good news is, Porter's wife is able to make use of him as a space heater at winter sporting events and his young daughter enjoys heating Pop Tarts on his head when dad drives her to school. He's also taking positive steps to control his hothead nature.

"At our Thanksgiving banquet this year, my anger management group voted me both the Most Improved Member and the Most Convenient Surface for Keeping Coffee Warm," Porter said proudly.

SPYCAT HISTORY LESSON:

Tybalt the privateer

By DICK SIEGEL

DURING the late 16th century, English seaman Sir Francis Drake suspected that Phillip of Spain was building an armada to attack the British Isles. But he needed proof to convince a skeptical Queen Elizabeth I. Thus, he sent his trusted ship's mouser, Tybalt, on a secret mission to the Spanish Court at Cadiz to discover Prince Phillip's plans.

The cat and his master left their ship, The Golden Hind, and rowed ashore on a while playing with a ball of yarn, he batted it into a chart room where he spied the blueprints for the armada.

Returning to Drake's waiting rowboat, Tybalt ripped a piece of paper into a tiny boat, illustrating the design of the Spanish vessels.

Then he snatched a codfish from the harbor. Filleting it, he used his claws to form the number 130 – the number of ships in the fleet.

Thanks to the wily cat, the English were able to complete

AQUARIUS	8, 24, 27, 31, 42, 46

ARIES
Mar. 21 – Apr. 19

You may face challenges this week, as unforeseen events complicate your life. Stay calm, evaluate your situation coolly and do what YOU decide is best.

Luck will follow a small household mishap. You will find a long-lost item!

Luck will ensue if you treat everyone — even complete strangers — with your usual courtesy.

Look to the numbers 7 and 51.

TAURUS
Apr. 20 – May 20

Don't be surprised if you find others laughing with you all week.

Pay no attention to people who poke fun at your lifestyle and convictions this week. Don't jump at the first opportunity to double your money. But pay attention to your lucky numbers: 10, 38 and 41.

You may see an old enemy in a new light. Give the person a chance to make amends. You will be rewarded for it.

GEMINI
May 21 – June 20

It's natural to be unrealistic and sensitive at times. You have to learn to live with what you can't change.

Pay attention to the numbers 9 and 18.

A chance meeting with a stranger could put a little fun in your life this week.

A coincidence has real significance! Don't rush into things, but don't shy away from romance, either.

A drive home from work brings joy!

CANCER
June 21 – July 22

Don't be swayed by so-called experts. If you are called out of town, be calm and roll with the situation. It will turn into good fortune, despite your initial impressions!

An e-mail or phone call late in the week can bring you incredibly good news!

Lucky numbers this week are 6 and 20.

A small person — possibly a child — will surprise you with a simple solution. Pay close attention to him or her.

LEO
July 23 – Aug. 22

A romantic evening could be the perfect prescription to cure an ailing relationship this week. Ease tensions with an intimate dinner and you might be surprised at the results.

Your intuition may be on the blink and you would be wise to avoid snap judgments. Don't place much stock in intuition.

A surprise visitor or unexpected phone call brings good fortune.

VIRGO
Aug. 23 – Sept. 22

Your luck will improve significantly this week. You can afford to be more daring and should take some chances to get ahead.

That stubborn streak could lead to trouble. Compromise to avoid hassles. A creative spark may ignite some changes in your life if you have the courage to follow your instincts.

Your lucky numbers are 4 and 11.

LIBRA
Sept. 23 – Oct. 22

You handle a deeply troubling problem with poise, dignity and profound intelligence. Employment and financial woes will ease.

Be alert for signs of burnout in the one you look to as an anchor. Some people don't know when to quit.

Spend lots of time with loved ones and pals this weekend.

Wearing white or blue will bring luck.

SCORPIO
Oct. 23 – Nov. 21

Concentrate on reaching modest goals this week. Remember the story of the tortoise and the hare.

Romance has not been your cup of tea. But it may be time for you to at least sample the thrills you have only heard or read about.

A dear friend is sinking in a sea of despair and you may be called on to do the rescuing. Be gentle but firm!

SAGITTARIUS
Nov. 22 – Dec. 21

Don't take a backseat when faced with new challenges this week.

A romantic interlude could be in the offing if you take time to realize that a special someone is dying to spend some time alone with you.

Stop being too busy for love. Try wearing red or turquoise.

The answer to a problem vexing you may be found in a friend's wisdom.

CAPRICORN
Dec. 22 – Jan. 19

Your key to finding a solution this week is to relax and think less.

You are a natural leader, but it might be a good idea for you to let others do the heavy lifting and not take charge.

Tread carefully! But don't fret. A long-lost love is in the wings. Lucky numbers are 5, 10 and 26. You'll be getting an important phone call. Be very polite and don't let jealousy distract you.

AQUARIUS
Jan. 20 – Feb. 18

A friend holds the key to improving your financial situation. Don't turn up your nose too quickly at a far-out plan.

This is a good week for action, so quit daydreaming and toss your hat in the ring. Once-impossible goals are within reach if you revive the courage to go for them.

It's very important to contact a friend you've been ignoring. Do it now.

PISCES
Feb. 19 – Mar. 20

Tired of getting sand kicked in your face?

NEW ENERGY BAR MAKES THE MEEK MIGHTY

By MICHAEL ROVIN

MIAMI — "The Bible tells us, 'The meek shall inherit the earth,' " said chemistry student Jack Syrus. "That may be true. But I also believe the meek should 'eat' the earth in order to protect our inheritance."

Syrus has turned that philosophy into a thriving business, one that was inspired by an incident at the beach.

"Some muscle-bound jerk kicked sand on me as he walked by," said Syrus. "It got in my mouth and I accidentally swallowed it. Now, I'm a kind of passive, scrawny guy but suddenly I felt energized. I got right in the guy's face and we almost came to blows.

"Despite the other guy's size, he was scared," Syrus said. "I could see it in his eyes."

The bully left and Syrus began thinking about the connection between his newfound confidence and what had just happened.

"Sand is mostly quartz," said Syrus. "Quartz is all-natural and can be assimilated by the body in molecular doses, like iron. It is also used in making things like concrete and cement. No wonder I felt so strong after eating it!"

As a result of the encounter, Syrus was inspired to create power snacks called "Sand Bars," which are essentially chocolate-covered beach.

been in stores, reaction has been overwhelmingly positive.

"I love them," said yoga instructor Doris Flinn. "Not only do I have a ton of energy but I'm more alert. Plus, the sand makes them extra crunchy."

"Personally I think they taste like — well, dirt," said college student Dan Foster. "But I figure the worse something tastes the healthier it is, right?"

Inspired by the success of Sand Bars, Syrus has also been preparing a new kind of health drink.

"I've discovered that the algae which forms in the watery bottom of ships has great healing properties," he said. "A gulp of prevention will go a long way when my customers begin to 'Bilge' strong bodies!"

DIMPLES IN A PINCH

HALFWAY, Ore. – If you want your child to grow up with those cute little dimples on their cheeks, there is a surefire way to make it happen – pinch their cheeks!

The University of Southern Wayfield conducted a study of 50 dimpleless newborns, and after the six-month period of 10-times-a-day pinching, 46 developed pronounced dimples.

"It makes them so much cuter," said one of the researchers. "So tell all those doting

TITANIC WAS SUNK

OSLO, Norway — Startling new evidence reveals that the S.S. Titanic was sunk in 1912 by a laser attack — from a space alien submarine!

By SCOTTY PAUL
Weekly World News

A team of scientists reached that conclusion after years of research into the sinking of the gigantic luxury liner off the shores of Newfoundland.

"We discovered three huge holes on the starboard side of the ship below the waterline," said noted physicist Dr. Jens Lykke. "We have concluded that those holes could only have been made by laser beams fired from an underwater craft."

Prior to the scientists' shocking report, it was believed the 46,328-ton Titanic went down after plowing into an gigantic iceberg in the North Atlantic.

More than 1,500 passengers and crew members died in the tragedy.

Dr. Lykke headed an international team of 10 scientists who determined that an alien spaceship capable of operating underwater was responsible for the Titanic disaster, as well as the sinking of two other ships and an attack on a Greek trawler in the same area in mid-April of 1912.

Among the items of evidence:

● The Swedish ship Angelholm Bay lost radio contact with the outside world after its captain reported seeing a mysterious, oval-shaped object hovering over the vessel at 1400 hours on April 13 — the day before the Titanic sank.

"The captain reported that the strange craft eventually landed in the sea 1,000 yards away and quickly submerged. That was the ship's last communication," Dr. Lykke said.

"Divers discovered the wreck-

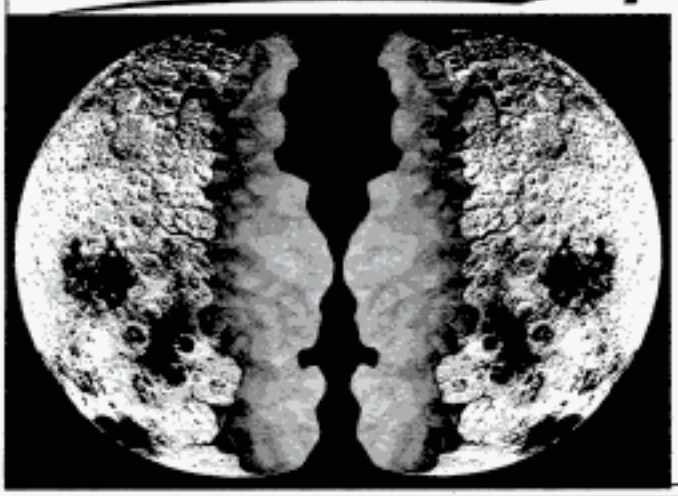
Lunar quake will tear moon in half WITHIN MONTHS, warns astronomer



DALLAS — Massive lunar quakes are splitting our moon in two and a leading astronomer says it's just a matter of time before it cracks in half — leaving a pair of smaller moons shining in its place!

"The quakes are continuous and, judging from my calculations, they'd be topping out at between 12 and 14 on the Richter scale — if the Richter scale even went that high," Italian astronomer Dr. Silvano Botta said in an interview here.

"At this rate, the moon can't possibly remain intact for more than five or six months. It's splitting in two and as much as I'd like to say otherwise, there's not a thing we can do about it."

WORRIED: President Bill Clinton.

Dr. Botta's shocking claim, first made public in a scientific report published just weeks ago, has other worried astronomers scrambling to verify his data.

Dr. Botta

Virtually all of them have conceded that the moon is being rocked by quakes of unprecedented intensity. "My colleagues know as well as I do that the implications in all this are almost beyond comprehension," Dr. Botta said.

"Because the moon controls the tides, the changes on the high seas and along the world's shorelines will be quite dramatic. It is likely that our seas age of the Angelholm Boy at the bottom of the ocean off the Greenland coast. Six holes clearly made by lasers were found in the hull."

● At 1530 hours on April 14, the captain of the Spanish trawler La Estrella Norte radioed he was under attack by a bizarre-looking airship with the ability to maneuver atop and under water. The craft, he said, was firing "deadly rays of light."

"The captain's last message was picked up by a ham radio operator in Iceland," Dr. Lykke said. "La Estrella Norte was never heard from again."

● The Greek trawler Constantine limped into Newfoundland shortly before dawn on April 15, less than 24 hours after the Titanic went down.

"Captain Aris Nicolaidis reported that the Constantine had been attacked by a strange aircraft that 'melted' his ship," Dr. Lykke said.

"Sixteen crew members gave identical accounts of the attack, but there is no record their stories were ever investigated.

"But we have investigated," the physicist added, "and there is no doubt in our minds that the spaceship that attacked the Constantine and the other vessels in the North Atlantic also sent the mighty Titanic to the bottom of the sea."

will become amazingly calm, not much rougher than a landlocked lake or pond.

"And the psychological impact around the world could be even greater.

"Studies have proven that the moon dramatically affects human behavior, and with two of them hanging in the sky instead of one, those effects are definitely going to intensify."

A White House insider said President Clinton is aware of Dr. Botta's warning and is "gravely concerned about what effect the splitting of the moon might have upon life here on Earth."

EXTRATERRESTRIALS INVADE INTERNET!

A whopping 27 percent of Internet users are actually extraterrestrials, a top expert claims.

Spanish physicist Andres Torejon says more than a quarter of communications are targeted at the computer network come from outer space, replacing impulses generated by Earthlings.

Torejon said he's concerned aliens are learning too much about humanity through their presence online.

Chinese discover UFO repair manual!

BEIJING — The Chinese claim to have found a UFO repair manual that will help them build a flying saucer of their own by 1999!

"The key to intergalactic flight is in our hands — right now, today," boasted astrophysicist Dr. Yu Hsin-chang. "This manual contains the blueprints for everything we will need."

The scientist refused to say where the Chinese discovered the 700-page manual, but he said it is written in a mathematical language that almost any scientist could understand.
